

Introduction

Linux is a free, open-source, Unix-like operating system.

We use it because it's free.

Inter-process communication via pipes

You can use pipes (|) to send data from one command to another, e.g. `find... | grep...`. This creates a temporary file that's destroyed afterwards by the system.